Open to all designers, design students, and anyone interested in making a difference, Global Innovation Challenge is an annual opportunity for the international design community to get together to tackle pressing social issues.

In today's connected world, everyone is empowered to influence a positive change. People from any domain and from any walk of life, passionate about bringing social change are encouraged to take part in this challenge.

This year's theme is Designing for Crisis.

Can we take inspiration from resilient economies like Japan after the world war or Norway after the Covid pandemic? Can our creative design community design resilient and sustainable systems at an individual, society, and national level? We have an opportunity to design from scratch.

Participating teams get the opportunity to learn first-hand from industry expert serving as mentors. Mentors will guide each team through the process of creating a viable solution for this challenge.

There is no entry fee.
