This Is Gender 2025 Open Call is a groundbreaking international initiative that invites artists, photographers, and creatives to explore the dynamic intersection of gender and disability through visual storytelling. Organized by Global Health 50/50, this competition seeks to amplify underrepresented voices and challenge societal norms by showcasing diverse perspectives on gender identity, disability, and inclusion. Participants are encouraged to submit works that delve into themes such as systems, spaces, social relations, embodiment, and world-building, offering a platform to redefine narratives and celebrate resilience in the face of adversity.

The competition is designed to foster creativity and innovation, providing a unique opportunity for artists to contribute to global conversations on equity and representation. By focusing on the lived experiences of individuals at the intersection of gender and disability, This Is Gender 2025 aims to dismantle stereotypes and highlight the richness of human diversity. Submissions can range from photography and digital art to mixed media, with an emphasis on originality, emotional depth, and cultural relevance. The initiative not only celebrates artistic talent but also serves as a catalyst for social change, encouraging audiences to reflect on their perceptions and biases.

This Is Gender 2025 is more than just a competition; it is a movement to elevate marginalized voices and create a more inclusive world. Selected works will be featured in Global Health 50/50's flagship global health report, virtual exhibitions, and international media platforms, ensuring widespread visibility and impact. By participating, artists join a global community of changemakers committed to advancing gender equality and disability rights through the power of art. This open call is a call to action for creatives to use their craft as a tool for advocacy, education, and inspiration, shaping a future where diversity is celebrated and inclusion is the norm.

There is no entry fee.
