Website: graphiccompetitions.com

The Bird Photographer of the Year (BPOTY) competition is an internationally contest that brings together the world's best bird photography, offering a platform for photographers to showcase their talents while supporting bird conservation efforts. Organized by Bird Photographer of the Year Limited, based in England, this annual event features a range of categories, from classic portraiture to more artistic and creative perspectives. BPOTY is not just a competition for professional photographers; it also warmly welcomes amateurs and young photographers, aiming to encourage a deep appreciation for birdlife through the power of visual storytelling.

The competition offers a unique blend of artistic excellence and conservation advocacy. Entries are evaluated across categories such as "Birds in Flight," which celebrates the dynamic grace of birds, and "Birds in the Environment," highlighting the interplay between birds and their habitats. Special categories like the "Conservation Award" focus on the pressing environmental challenges that birds face globally, urging participants to present strong conservation stories through their imagery. This fusion of art and activism allows BPOTY to shine as a contest that not only rewards technical and creative mastery but also contributes to wildlife protection efforts through the medium of photography.

Photographers from all over the world are eligible to participate, with youth entries welcomed at no cost. The grand prize winner is awarded a significant cash prize of £3,500, along with international recognition as the Bird Photographer of the Year. Additionally, category winners receive £500, and there are numerous other awards for portfolios and video entries. Through these generous prizes and its focus on conservation, BPOTY not only elevates the art of bird photography but also raises vital awareness for the protection of bird species globally, making it a prestigious competition with a meaningful cause.

Entry fee: £30 for adults; free for youth entrants.

Eligibility
