The John Ruskin Prize is a multidisciplinary art competition that seeks to attract a diverse array of artists, designers, and makers from across the globe. Now in its 7th edition, the prize has expanded to include international submissions, inviting participants to engage with a theme that delves deep into the intersection of perception and creation. Open to artists aged 18 and over, this competition embraces a broad spectrum of mediums, from traditional forms like painting, sculpture, and textiles, to contemporary practices including digital art, photography, animation, and mixed media. The prize is designed to highlight works that resonate with the central theme, “From the Eye to the Hand,” encouraging creators to explore how observation translates into artistic expression.

The 7th John Ruskin Prize is not only a platform for showcasing diverse artistic talent but also a celebration of the rich legacy of John Ruskin. Known for his belief in the profound connection between art, nature, and morality, Ruskin’s philosophy continues to inspire this competition. Participants are invited to submit works that reflect this ethos, exploring how the act of creation is influenced by what we see and perceive. Whether through intricate drawings, experimental installations, or evocative video pieces, artists are encouraged to interpret the theme in ways that reveal the universal truths that Ruskin championed. The competition’s inclusive nature ensures that a wide range of creative voices can contribute to this ongoing dialogue between art and the world around us.

In keeping with its commitment to accessibility and diversity, the John Ruskin Prize has introduced digital submissions to accommodate international participants, making it easier than ever for artists from any corner of the world to participate. The prize structure includes multiple tiers, offering significant rewards for outstanding work: a £3,000 1st Prize, a £2,000 2nd Prize, a £1,000 Alan Davidson Under 26 Prize, and a £1,000 International Prize. These awards not only provide financial support but also offer recipients the opportunity to gain recognition within the global art community. The competition culminates in a shortlist exhibition at Trinity Buoy Wharf in London, where selected works will be displayed, further cementing the John Ruskin Prize as a key event in the contemporary art calendar.

The entry fee varies by category: £25 for one artwork, £40 for two, and £50 for three for standard entries; £20, £25, and £38 for under-26 entries; and £15, £20, and £30 for international digital entries.
